

USGS Webinars:

National Summary Webinar—The USGS recently released a decision support system that provides access to six newly-developed regional models that describe how rivers receive and transport nutrients from natural and human sources to nutrient sensitive waters, such as those along the Atlantic Coast, Gulf of Mexico, and Pacific Northwest Coast.

The USGS will provide an overview of the regional models and describe how the online decision support system can be used to prioritize areas for nutrient reduction actions, identify which sources contribute the largest amounts of nutrients to downstream waters, and evaluate combinations of nutrient reduction scenarios.
